

Felix Editor's Report
For Imperial College Union Council Meeting, 13 March 2007
A report by Andy Sykes, Felix Editor

Felix's production

This is the last issue of term (Felix traditionally breaks up one week before the rest of the College). The number of copies printing is falling to 4,000 from 4,500 to save a bit of money.

Staff shortages

With Felix people campaigning for elections, sitting exams, and working on year-end projects, the staff has shrunk dramatically. I've had to lose a few editors as personal commitments have made it impossible for them to work for the paper; I've replaced two, and recruited a few more who will start next term.

Felix's advertising status

I will be working over the Easter period chasing advertisers for payment. Advertising revenue is beginning to dry up as the ad agencies have mostly used up their budgets for the year.

The new website

The new website is up, thanks to Dave Ingram and company, and it's great (if completely un-updated so far). I'll be sitting down to upload all the old issues over the Easter period, and recruit a web editor to do this in future.

Is that it?

Yup.
